

On the cover
 Ten years on from the collapse of Lehman Brothers the system is safer. But the right lessons have not all been learned: leader, page 11. More has changed than meets the eye. But is it enough? Page 20. America's long-lived recovery breeds complacency about lingering macroeconomic risks: Free exchange, page 66. Why Italy's government bonds are so unstable: Buttonwood, page 65

American politics One of Donald Trump's own officials portrays a man who is unfit to be president, page 24. The attorney-general's resistance to presidential bullying is unexpected and heroic: Lexington, page 28

The war in Syria The army is massing to take Idlib, the last rebel stronghold. Worse, nobody can stop the bloodbath: leader, page 14. The battle may produce the biggest humanitarian catastrophe of the war, page 39

NAFTA The contours of a new trade deal are emerging. It is worse than the old one but better than none, page 29

Chinese philanthropy People in China give little to charity. The Communist Party is to blame, page 37

Emerging markets Why has Argentina's economic orthodoxy worked no better than Turkey's iconoclasm? page 61. South Africa slips into recession, page 42

Digital censorship The big tech companies are not neutral. Turning them into censors does not solve that problem: leader, page 12. Social-media platforms have travelled further down the road of choosing what people say and see than users probably realise, page 52

International

- 50 Traffic jams
The slow and the furious
- 51 Traffic and geography
Let's try that again

Business
