America's mid-terms If the Democrats are to retake the Senate, they will do so thanks to their moderate candidates, page 23. The triumph of the far-left in Democratic primaries has been greatly overstated, page 24

Fertility in Africa Countries can bring down their birth rates without resorting to Asian-style illiberalism: leader, page 12. The continent's high birth rate is keeping it poor, page 40. Child marriage is proving stubbornly persistent, page 41. The number of extremely poor Africans is rising, page 69

Hurricanes and typhoons Climate change means more severe storms in both the Atlantic and the Pacific. But governments are getting better at preparing for them, page 54

AI in Europe It may be behind, but the European Union can influence the development of AI for the better—and not just at home: leader, page 10. Europe is gearing up to try to challenge the AI superpowers, America and China, page 57

The trade war America's tariffs on China have several goals—some of them unachievable: leader, page 10. The two economic superpowers are now embroiled in a proper trade war, page 66. How China's currency sets the tone in the foreign-exchange market: Buttonwood, page 68. The curious role of the Global Times: Chaguan, page 39

Japan The prime minister, Shinzo Abe, needs to set records for productivity, not just longevity: leader, page 11. During his last years in office, he has a lot to do, page 33
